Dear Friends,

It has been a very good year at the Garden. Moderate temps, adequate rainfall and wonderful service to our visitors. All of these things contributed to a fine Eloise Butler Wildflower Garden season.

And yet, the ultimate accomplishment for 2015 has been the completion of Phase 1 of the Cary George Wetland Project, a new wetland boardwalk, highlighted by the bridge span honoring our fourth Gardener, Cary George. Perhaps you were able to join us for the boardwalk celebration on September 20 when Cary cut the ribbon to the bridge and saw his small plaque installed on the bench. I have to say that it was most satisfying to be present for this long-awaited event.

On behalf of the Friends board, and all of us who cherish the stewardship history of the Garden, thank you so much for your donations and support toward making this dream come true.

Please enjoy these photos and know that you are a part of preserving the Garden and our traditions.

This special issue of the Gentian is full of photos of the boardwalk celebration, our Schutt House Garden Party, which was held in late June and our October Volunteer Appreciation Event.

I hope you will be warmed at heart by the many happy faces and beautiful images shared in these pages as we go into the colder months while the Garden rests and we wait for another amazing year.

Most sincerely,

J Pam Weiner
At Home in the Garden
A Q & A with Phoebe Waugh, 2014 Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board Volunteer of the Year

Phoebe Waugh has been coming to the Eloise Butler Wildflower Garden for more than half a century. She has served on the board of the Friends of the Wild Flower Garden for 10 years, as board secretary and, since 2009, as historian for the Friends. In 2014, she was named Volunteer of the Year by the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board. Here, she talks about her love of the Garden and why it is so important to her.

Do you remember the first time you visited the Garden?
I first saw the Wild Flower Garden in the first half of the 1960s when, as a young couple, my husband and I explored many things in the Twin Cities on the weekends. My first memory is of [then-Garden Curator] Ken Avery talking about having showy orchids in the very wet wetland and pasque flower on the very hot mown grass of the upper Garden. I never saw either flower but did see the showy lady slipper.

My second memory is of a visit in 1969 when we had a young family. I remember our two-year-old daughter waving at the dwarf irises that were planted in the open circle in front of what is now the shelter.

How and when did you become a volunteer at the Garden?
In the mid-’90s I was between jobs and becoming more involved in caring for my aging parents. I returned to the Garden and found it to be a refuge from the stresses of my responsibilities and concerns. I also found large patches of lovely trout lilies and a glorious prairie on those high hills above the woodland. I started to visit every few weeks and soon was bringing a camera or camcorder to record what I had discovered.

I signed up as a volunteer in 1998. With the help and encouragement of Diana Thottingal and other naturalists, I began to take pictures of the grasses and, eventually, to collect information on and photos of the grasses in the Garden in a notebook that is in the shelter. Diana and I shared the view that it was much easier to study plants and mushrooms because they did not move as fast as other elements of our natural world.

You received a 2014 Volunteer of the Year award from the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board, after being nominated by naturalist Tammy Mercer, leader of the Early Birders group. Can you talk about your volunteer efforts with that group?
Tammy says I was one of the original Early Saturday Morning Birders, but we are both unsure when the group started. I have always been interested in bird song but frustrated with the difficulty in spotting the singer. (All birders have this problem in differing degrees.) So I easily slipped into the task of recording the birds seen and/or heard when it became a problem to remember some of the many we had noted. A few years ago, I began to write up the phenology notes on our experience. [The phenology notes are compiled in a notebook in the shelter.] In 2014 I began including more descriptions of bird behavior. This year I have been compiling a list of when birds were seen in the Garden and South Wirth.

In a way I was surprised by the nomination, and both pleased and embarrassed by the recognition. There are so many who contribute to the success of the Garden as volunteers and professionals. The award included $500 that could be designated toward a project or projects in a Minneapolis park. I decided my award money would go toward some books on birds and plants and to the Cary George Wetland Project.

What do you like most about the Garden?
What I enjoy most about my experiences in the Garden is the joy of exploration and discovery. Some of it is my own discovery of things, like a migrating Bachman’s warbler, the spotlight of the ruby and yellow throats of our hummingbirds and common yellowthroats, and hearing a wood thrush one evening in the Garden. But I also enjoy sharing the joy with others in finding a mushroom or seeing a pretty bird.

Garden Curator’s Letter

So quickly, another Wildflower Garden season has come and gone. It was a very full year, complemented by a truly beautiful season of weather. With plenty of moisture to nourish recently planted and well-established plants throughout the season, the Garden’s flora was even more radiant than usual and so many visitors took delight in the beauty of this extraordinary place all season long.

We had many special events and projects this year, along with the ongoing hustle and bustle of programming and garden care. I would like to acknowledge a handful of highlights from the past season and send a warm thank you out to everyone who has contributed to these efforts. Please know that there is a lot more great work that is not mentioned, but is deeply appreciated.

Heartfelt thanks to the Friends of the Wild Flower Garden Board and to Mark Addicks and Tom Hoch for hosting a fantastic fundraiser in the beautiful gardens surrounding Mark and Tom’s home. The fundraiser was a great success on many levels, and it was touching to see so many community members present to support the Wildflower Garden.

Phase 1 of the wetland boardwalk project was completed in July. Thank you to all of the donors, the Friends, the designers, the wood millers and modifiers, the boardwalk fabricators, and the installation crew, as well as to numerous Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board staff members who worked to bring this to fruition. A lovely celebration of the project and dedication of the bridge to former Gardener Cary George on September 20 brought many together to honor Cary’s great work and legacy here.

Another enjoyable volunteer appreciation banquet was held in late October to celebrate the fabulous work that Wildflower Garden volunteers carry out every day. Thank you again to each and every volunteer for your efforts and enthusiasm this season. I also want to thank the Wildflower Garden staff who educate and inspire visitors with each encounter, and who organized and led a remarkable number of special tours and programs for youth and adults this season.

If you haven’t yet gone to see them, 22 prints from the Eloise Butler Florilegium Project will be on display at Macalester College’s Smail Gallery until August 1, 2016. Also of note, the Florilegium Project was featured in the November/December 2015 issue of the Department of Natural Resources’ magazine, Minnesota Conservation Volunteer, which reaches an estimated 500,000 readers. We are fortunate to have this wonderful project (and the Wildflower Garden) shared with such a wide audience within the conservation community.

Although the Garden gates are now closed to the public, we continue to work on several projects to maintain the health of the Garden and to prepare for next season’s programs, plantings and special projects. For instance, oak wilt management is underway, as we continue our efforts to maintain the health of the majestic oaks of the Garden. The Shelter roof has been reshingled with new cedar shakes and it looks great. A new wood-burning stove insert will be installed soon in the now-defunct fireplace, so the Shelter will be as cozy as ever come next spring. Several ash trees close to garden trails have been marked and will be removed as part of our efforts to minimize the negative repercussions of anticipated Emerald Ash Borer infestations.

Five years have passed since the Garden’s first management plan was approved by the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board. This plan has proven to be very useful and supportive of our work at the Wildflower Garden. Updates to the management plan’s project and program goals are being made for the next five-year period this season.

I’m continually awed by how much effort goes into stewarding the vitality and integrity of the Wildflower Garden. Thanks again to all who contribute to this dynamic and meaningful work. As we continue to care for the Garden and prepare for another vibrant season, we wish you the very best and look forward to seeing you in 2016!
The Schutt House Garden Party was held on June 25 at the historic Schutt home above the north-end lagoon at Lake of the Isles in Minneapolis. Thanks to all who attended (or donated to) this wonderful event, which helped raise funds to support the Eloise Butler Wildflower Garden and Bird Sanctuary.
Many gathered at the Garden for the ceremony celebrating the completion of the new bridge honoring Cary George, the Wildflower Garden’s fourth Gardener. For those who weren’t able to join us, we hope you enjoy these photos of the dedication event. Cary George was Head Gardener from 1987 to 2003, having first started work at the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board in horticulture in 1975.
Ants in Winter

Down here in the nest,
we eat eggs
our queen laid last fall
as sun waned.
We huddle in a writhing mass
around the queen,
keeping her warm.
Slowly,
though we share everything—
our bodies’ heat, remnants of food—
some of us
still starve, still freeze.
Our orb dwindles.

Two days prior to this writing, the Friends’ Invasive Plant Action Group (FIPAG) held its first buckthorn event of 2015. Two years ago we started work in an area outside the northeast part of the Garden, and we’re still plugging away at it. It’s the hardest, slowest kind of buckthorn removal. The area was mowed about four or five years ago, and the mowed buckthorn stems have re-emerged.

The dreaded resprouts are difficult to get hold of and have newly sprouted limbs that break off easily along with very long roots. All of this adds up to a thicket of perversely challenging work. But on Sunday, September 27, we were up to it. We had fine weather, a dozen people (four of whom were first-time volunteers), and plenty of weed wrenches, treats, and good spirits. Our remaining two buckthorn events went well, and we were able to finish the work!

We schedule a total of three buckthorn events in the fall. Each lasts about 2½ hours on Saturdays or Sundays. If you’d like to help, please go to the volunteer section of the Friends’ website—for details. You're all invited to join us, but whether you come in person or in spirit, we appreciate your support. Also, if you’re not on our email list but would like to get involved or just keep up on what we’re doing, please contact us at

Shelter Volunteer Update

Dear friends, it’s been an undeniably lovely year at the Garden and, as always, my troop of loyal Shelter docents were there to welcome visitors and help them make the most out of their visit. I am grateful every day for the folks who make the Shelter run and give so generously of their time.

This year, we had 10 new volunteers join our ranks and offer their time. I’d like to recognize them by name:

Farrand Anderson   Kira von Steinbergs
Ann Beane          Carol Stoops
Jennifer Dunne     Gillian Tomasini
Karen Frei         Maggie Tuff
Jan Schulz

Evens though our season is nearly over, potential new volunteers are always welcome to contact me for more information. We can get you started in 2016!

Thanksgiving day today—the turkey is in the oven—and real winter weather has descended upon us. There is a howling gale—and snow straight from the north. So I did what I love most; I put on overshoes, winter coat, muffler and heavy gloves. And I walked over to the Wildflower Garden. Down into the glen I descended where it was very still, with snow flakes falling straight down—though the wind was still roaring thru the tree tops above. Really beautiful down there. I looked for my owl but could not locate him. And I could not help but wonder why mortals huddle around their radiators when they could go abroad and enjoy this delightful specialty of winter—snow flakes sifting down thru the spruce trees—and the wind roaring over head. Maybe I’m just different.
2015 Volunteer Appreciation Event

On October 25 we held our annual Volunteer Appreciation Event at St. Mary’s Greek Orthodox Church to celebrate all those who help make the Garden such an extraordinary place. Volunteers help out with so many things at the Wildflower Garden, from greeting guests at the Shelter and pointing them to specific plants to pulling buckthorn and garlic mustard and personally tending designated areas in need of extra care.

We are very grateful to all of you. And we hope you enjoyed the evening and left with memories of tasty food and drinks and stories shared with others who love the Garden as much as you do.

The Eloise Butler Wildflower Garden and Bird Sanctuary is comprised of cultivated but naturalistic woodland, wetland and prairie environments, 2/3 mile of mulch-covered pathways and a rustic shelter where educational programming and materials can be found. It is the oldest public wildflower garden in the United States. The 15-acre site is located within the city of Minneapolis and is owned and operated by the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board. The Garden is open from April 1 through October 15 from 7:30 A.M. to a half-hour before sunset.

As always, the buffet supper at Volunteer Appreciation Day was scrumptious.
